01 A LITTLE ABOUT ME

HI, I'M AIDAN

Hi, I'm Aidan. I'm a Support Worker at ESports Collective. I grew up in Harare, Zimbabwe, and moved to Bairnsdale in April 2024 - it's somewhere I'm proud to call home now. I'm naturally a bit quieter when I first meet people. I tend to listen and get a feel for the room, and once I'm comfortable you'll see a lot more of my personality, including a pretty spontaneous sense of humour. Outside of work I'm into gaming, music, and catching up with friends and family. One of my favourite things is getting in the car, driving somewhere I've never been and just seeing what I find.

02 MY LIVED EXPERIENCE

Moving from Zimbabwe to Australia was a massive change, but it was one I felt ready for. My family here supported me while I found my feet, made connections through my first job at McDonald's and slowly built a new life in Bairnsdale. Growing up in Zimbabwe taught me a lot about community, friendship and making people feel welcome. When my parents separated, I learnt not to immediately take sides - I cared about both of them. Studying mental health at TAFE showed me how differently people can experience life. I've wanted to work in mental health because it's something people push aside or are afraid to talk about, even though what someone is going through is very real. I want to be someone who doesn't push those conversations away.

03 WHY I'M HERE

A friend recommended ESports Collective when I asked where I could work while still supporting people, and what stood out when I got here was the team - friendly, helpful and genuinely working together. The support I want to give is patient and built on trust. If someone's hanging back from a group I'm not going to push them into it, and if they're having a rough day and aren't ready to talk, that's okay - I'll check back in when they are.
