01 A LITTLE ABOUT ME

HI, I'M NATE

Hi, I'm Nate. I'm 18, my family's Filipino, and gaming and computers have been a big part of my life since I was young. I got into this work after seeing a support worker bringing people to Adapt Gym - I got talking to the team, kept coming along, and ended up here. At ESports Collective I spend my time getting to know each person - what they're into, what they're working towards - and then we take it a step at a time. I also head to the gym with some of the people I support. Everyone learns differently, so patience and trust matter. Outside work I'm big on self-improvement, travelling and exploring new places, and I'll happily try something I've never done before.

02 MY LIVED EXPERIENCE

I didn't finish school - things came together for me a different way, through work I actually cared about. Past that, I don't have one big turning point to point to - what I've learned has come from working alongside people. Everyone learns and approaches things differently, so I try not to assume I know what someone needs before I've spent time with them. Patience, understanding and trust are what I keep coming back to. The part of this work I find most rewarding is being there when someone gets over something they've been stuck on, and getting to share in that - the learning and the fun of it.

03 WHY I'M HERE

Gaming and computers gave me something I was good at and genuinely cared about, and I like being somewhere young people get to do the same. What I bring is time and patience - I'd rather get to know someone and what they're aiming for than push them along at somebody else's pace.
