01 A LITTLE ABOUT ME

HI, I'M TAYLOR

Hi, I'm Taylor. I'm a Support Worker at Gippsland Care Collective and I'm part way through my Certificate III in Individual Support (Disability). I came into this work through childcare, and more recently through supporting a young autistic child one to one – that's where I found the work I actually want to do. What I've learned matters most is patience, shared interests, and letting someone set their own pace. Outside of work I'm a film person, and I like making things with my hands.

02 MY LIVED EXPERIENCE

During high school I had my own struggles with anxiety. What I took from that is that sometimes the most meaningful thing someone can do is simply sit beside you, giving you the time and space to feel safe. I find I naturally connect with young people who are quiet, anxious, or who feel different, because I understand what it feels like to wonder whether you belong.

03 WHY I'M HERE

What I love most about this work is helping people feel comfortable enough to be themselves. If someone walks in anxious or unsure, I'll take the time to learn what they enjoy and let them set the pace from there. Sometimes trust gets built through conversation and sometimes through comfortable silence – either way, it happens on their terms.
